ARGUMENT

Contemporary migratory movements of people and families within the European continent confront us with the increasingly complex challenges of living together. These movements take place in situations of crisis, conflict and change, impact at different levels - social, cultural, health, climate, educational and economic - and have a lasting effect on all institutions and groups.

During the study days, organised in partnership by the EATGA and the CISS, we propose to create a space for reflection, confrontation and shared experience. The participants will explore and share what, in the relationship with the cultural Other, facilitates and/or hinders a dialogue, an encounter and the creation of work in common. Based on the experiences of the group sessions, the participants will be invited to reflect and discuss on the appropriate group arrangements for analytical, psychosocial, educational or therapeutic work or intervention in today's intercultural contexts.

How do our cultural affiliations influence the inter- and transcultural bond and its relation to Otherness? How can we think about the boundaries between individual/group, here/there/elsewhere, homogeneous/heterogeneous, land/sea, culture/cultures, which arise in the transcultural approach and encounter?

During this experience, each person chooses the language(s) he/she wishes to speak to communicate to others, which is part of the worksetting and the experiential character of the study days.

EATGA

For the past forty years, the European Association for Transcultural Group Analysis (EATGA) has been exploring the cultural foundation of individuals and groups, with the aim of contributing to the thinking about the inter- and transcultural relationships of the encounter with the Other. This is particularly relevant when, therapists, analysts, psychosocial workers or educators, work with people of "foreign" origin. www.eatga.org

CISS

The Cooperazione Internazionale Sud Sud (CISS) has been active since 1985 in the various "south" of the world and works with grassroots communities, movements, associations, through international cooperation activities, local development initiatives, to support the marginalised sectors of the population, immigrants and refugees. For the CISS, cooperation means building bridges between social realities, between individuals and territories in order to enhance and strengthen the bonds of our presence in the world. www.cissong.org
